Please receive this letter as an opportunity to learn about an exciting project we are working on and the possibility to collaborate with the Black Wall Street Gallery for change in Tulsa. It begins with the Conciliation Series, this is a year-long series that pairs two artists -- one black and one white -- to build personal and group relationships that cultivate meaningful, lasting bonds. The series seeks to generate positive relations between black and white communities and is featured exclusively at the Black Wall Street Gallery. So much attention has generated since our opening in September 2018 as a result of this series, we felt it only right to share it with more of Tulsa. The result is the Abridged Conciliation Series, this traveling mini-series serves as a condensed version of what is featured at the Gallery, and includes members of the community whose work we feel can make a great impact.

Our shared history evidences the imperative of working collaboratively toward amicable, productive and sustainable engagement. This is why we're reaching out to you, the purpose of the Abridged Conciliation Series is to share these compelling works with the community and its visitors alike. Additionally the series will provide a platform for a variety of talented artists who we feel truly represent the diversity in the art community. The artists range from college students at the University of Tulsa, to students at the Tulsa Girl's Art School (third grade through twelfth), and finally a group that we call The Greats, experienced and established artists who have been creating for 20 years or more. This is achieved by featuring works in local establishments all over Tulsa this summer during the months of June, July and August. With your help, we can do more to improve relations within our community and share compelling, thought-provoking works all over the city of Tulsa.

We believe that [establishment name] is truly a unique and integral part of the community and that its customers understand and value the quality that [establishment name] delivers daily. That is why we've made it a priority to reach out to your establishment, it's important to us that this series is displayed in an establishment that is loved and respected by our community. We hope to speak with you more about this collaboration for change.
